Jim and Holly Akenson. 7003 Days.

Deep in the Idaho wilderness the last vestiges of Old Idaho linger. An eager young couple seeking adventure and challenge, Jim and Holly Akenson moved to their log cabin in the wilderness to manage Taylor Ranch, University of Idaho's wilderness research station. They spent their careers merging two worlds, embracing the simple living conditions and backcountry culture, while meeting the demands of university research and education.

In 7003 Day, Jim describes the unique backcountry culture and its characters and the many adventures and encounters with wildlife and nature, as Jim and Holly track wolves and cougars, use mules for transportation and ranch work, and connect university students with nature.

Jim and Holly will also hit upon some of their best bowhunting experiences from the Sheepeater Country of Idaho
